PROFESS

Program for Future Environmental Scientists and Stewards

LandHealth's watershed stewardship program, ProFESS, is returning for its sixth year to empower 9th-12th grade students in Philadelphia! Accepted applicants will have the opportunity to gain real-world leadership experience and engage with environmental and civic leaders as they become the next generation of environmental scientists and stewards!

If you are a high school student in Philadelphia interested in training to become stewards of the creek while learning more about the health of our city, then sign up today!

Share the word, and be sure to sign up before the deadline on May 15, 2022!

Upcoming Events

This spring, LandHealth will be having several planting days!

This month, LandHealth will be helping to create a vegetable bed with one of their neighborhood community!

In April, we will have a planting day somewhere around Cobbs Creek with student volunteers, and a Nursery Spring Cleanup day with Board Members! More information and dates for outside volunteers will come soon!

Urban-Eco Wonderwalks are coming back soon! Stay up-to-date on new walks, podcasts, and other events the moment they are published!

Past Blogs: Nursery and Partnerships

Built upon an abandoned lot, LandHealth's Native Plant Nursery aims to rebuild a natural habitat in Philadelphia. How does LandHealth work with institutions and individuals throughout the city in landscaping with native plants?

Read the full blog, 'Nursery and Partnerships' by Taisia Osipova and Steve Jones today!

In the meantime, check out another past blog, 'Why Should You Care About Native Plants' by Maddie Worth!

Podcast Series: Ecosystem of My Mind

Activism is like a full-time job, some people do it all day long. It can be stressful, especially when there is so much environmental injustice in our city...

Check out part TWO of the episode, 'Empathy Gone Extinct: Environmental Injustice in Philadelphia'!
